MRS. WONG KAI KEE'S APPEAL.

夫人求其夫命

"Please Do Not Harm My Husband."

"Please do not harm my husband," Little Mrs. Wong Kai Kee, whose husband died in fear of his life last Friday, pleads with her countrymen for mercy for him.

In and out the dingy tenements of Chinatown she patters, to the haunts of influential Chinamen, begging them to repeal the edict against the fugitive.

Wong Kai Kee, in his little studio at 1 Doyers street, drew last week for a newspaper the facts around Yaku. He also reproduced the heading of the famous "Kill the Foreigners!" proclamation of the Emperor.

For that the powerful secret societies decided he was trying to inflame Americans and they ordained that he should be punished. He narrowly escaped from them last Friday.

To all her entreaties a suave smile and "all right" are the answers. This means nothing at all and she knows it.

To enlist the sympathies of all her countrymen she to-day wrote to The Evening World a simple plea:

"Please do not harm my husband." "They may see that," she whispered. "May be all right then."

MRS. WEE KAI KEE

Mrs. Wong Kai Kee is an intelligent Chinese woman who came to San Francisco almost a baby seventeen years ago. In her girlhood she attended the "Mission School," and seven years ago she married Wong Kai Kee.

He is an artist, architect and sign painter. The Joss house is a sample of his work, and the great green and gilt signs in Chinatown at test his skill. She was a "representative Chinese woman" at the World's Fair in Chicago.

"My husband, he the best gooder man in whole world," she said. "He not come back. I 'traid had Chinese man kill him. They say he write and mak picture that mak American mens hate Chinese mens. That not true. My husband he won't do lak that. He run way because he frightened. He frightened, too. I want him back so much. I all alone now."

"But Mrs. Kee," it was asked, "suppose his countrymen here in Chinatown sentence him to go to China for drawing the pictures?"

She jumped from her chair, clasping her hands. "He won't go. He good American man. They kill him there. He come back. I know he come back sure."

Mrs. Kee still sits in the little shop waiting.

Emperor's Edict Blames Allies for Trouble In the Empire and Excepts Tientsin Losses from Indemnity.

A tone of defiance pervades the alleged edict of the Chinese Emperor. He resents the attack on Tientsin and excepts payment of indemnity for the losses of the allies there. He considers the attack unwarranted.

In the House of Commons to-day the British Government declared no credence could be given to Chinese despatches. No faith was placed in the Conger message.

All the foreign Governments and our Consuls in China have replied to Secretary Hay discrediting the alleged Conger despatch.

The European Governments indicate they will not advance on Peking on the strength of the despatch.

Consul Goodnow at Shanghai cables that Prince Tuan wires that a Chinese foreign official saw all the envoys alive on July 18.

Admiral Remy reports that he went to Tientsin himself and that an advance on Peking by the allies will be begun July 30.

Minister Wu denies that he has been asked to deliver Conger to Admiral Remy. He declares the task would be impossible just now.

The French Foreign Office has received "reliable news" that the envoys were in Prince Ching's palace at Peking, July 9, barricaded against the Chinese.

BRITAIN IS SCEPTICAL.

Government Makes a Statement to the Commons Casting Doubt on Conger Despatch.

LONDON, July 23.—In the House of Commons to-day Under Foreign Secretary Brodrick communicated statements of the Chinese authorities with regard to the safety of the legations at Peking, and said the Chinese Minister declared them to be unharmed.

Brodrick read the text of the Imperial edict of July 18 and commented on Minister Conger's despatch to the Department of State of the United States. Mr. Brodrick said that though the despatch was of the same date as the edict's assurance of safety, the latter was not borne out by Mr. Conger.

Consul Warren had telegraphed to the Governor of Shanghai to know how a message from Peking reached him in two days, and why there was no message from the British Minister, Sir Claude MacDonald. The Governor replied that the United States Minister's message was sent by the Tsung-ti-Yamen (Chinese Foreign Office) by a messenger travelling 800 leagues (roughly 250 miles) a day.

"Of course you," the Governor of Shanghai, had added, "there is no telegraphic communication. I cannot explain why MacDonald has not telegraphed, but I beg you not to be anxious about the ministers, for they and the others are all living and unharmed, or this I've already had several reliable messages."

"Seeing that over a month has elapsed," said Mr. Brodrick, "since any communication reached the Government from the British Legation, and that the Tsung-ti-Yamen is communicating by messenger with various Chinese authorities, Her Majesty's Government feel they cannot give credence to any statement or despatch attributed to the Emperor or Chinese Government unless they are fortified by letters signed and dated by Sir Claude MacDonald or other British official or by some telegram in our cipher."

According to the translation read by Mr. Brodrick the Imperial edict opens as follows:

"In the Confucian philosophy, in the spring and autumn, it is written, envoys should not be killed. How, then, can it be supposed the Tarone's policy is to connive at allowing troops and
